GIRL'S FATHER BITTER AT DEP'T STORES

Parent of Missing Lydia Wiles, Rothschild Employee, Blames State Street for Girl's Disappearance—Girl Phones Sister—Call Untraced.

If the parents of Chicago would listen to John F. Wiles they would hesitate to send their young daughters to work behind the counters of the State street department stores. Wiles' 18-year-old daughter, Lydia, went to Rothschild's to work just one month ago. She has been missing since Tuesday.

Wiles, who is a railroad conductor and lives at 6102 Stewart av., doesn't like to talk about department stores. He curses the day he ever allowed Lydia to "work in Rothschild's to earn pin money during vacation time. Before Lydia was swallowed up by State street she had never known adventure. She was known throughout the neighborhood as a "home" girl who never had a "fellow" nor ever went to dances.

At Englewood high school, where Lydia attended she had a splendid record for scholarship and attendance. She was a star pupil. When school was over she got the idea of working. Wiles kicked at first. He had heard in a vague way of some of the dangers by which department
